Panellist – Malachi – National Disability Services

Malachi wasn't sure what path to take when he left school. After studying audio engineering and working in security for a few years, a friend recognised Malachi's qualities and suggested he consider a job in disability care.

Malachi is now 5 years into his career in the disability sector and absolutely loves it. Malachi will bring his vibrant personality and enthusiasm for the sector to our event and we're sure you'll be seriously considering a career in disability support after hearing from him.

Malachi will talk about the growth of jobs in the disability sector and share lots of practical information about how you can go about applying for a rewarding role in disability support. Malachi will also share with us the qualities and skills that will help you succeed in the health field. Malachi believes passionately there is a great job out there helping people and knows that if you are brave and open to new possibilities you'll find one that is perfect for you!

Panellist – Pamela – Queensland Health

During high school, Pamela really wanted to be a doctor. She was a keen science student and really liked biology, chemistry, physics and maths.

Pamela was a very studious and motivated student, however once she started university she realised that becoming a doctor might be a bit harder than she initially thought. She also discovered there were many other health pathways available.

Pamela realised that her favourite part of the idea of being a doctor was the close relationship with patients and this motivated her to pursue a career in speech pathology.

Pamela now works as a speech pathologist in a Queensland hospital and has her study cap back on and is studying her PhD. Pamela will talk to us about the importance of being a people person in any health profession, as well as what a typical day looks like for her working in a hospital.

Panellist – Dr Holly – Melbourne Health

Holly is a junior doctor working in a Melbourne hospital, though originally from Queensland. She has completed her medical degree and is currently working in various departments in the hospital, still figuring out exactly what she wants to do long term.

In high school, and still in her career now, Holly has always found it very useful to be able to learn from the experiences of others older than her who have been through it before.

Holly is excited to share her experiences and learnings with us, including the highs and lows of working in the medical profession, and explaining to us the other different roles she works with at the hospital each day.

Facilitator

Molly

Beacon Foundation

A student of psychology and an experienced performer and educator, Molly finds greatest joy in helping this to grow. When she's not working with children, or studying to be a child psychologist/school counsellor, she is likely to be found hunched in her veggie patch or renovating her house lovingly by hand.

Molly passionately believes in the power of helping young people discover a sense of their unique place in the world, their individual strengths and passions. By facilitating the awakening and focusing of innate skills to communicate and utilise these strengths, Molly aims to support young Australians to find their niche and see real value in what they have to offer.
